Dear Complex Hiring Team,

Please accept this letter as an expression of my interest in your Freelance Complex News Content Creator position. My career has been spent at the intersection of culture, breaking news, and social media- building audiences through impactful storytelling.

My reporting background spans policy, civic organizing, celebrity news, and activism. At Howard University, I covered DC street vending legislation, federal underrepresentation, student activism- stories that required translating bureaucratic processes for audiences directly harmed by their outcomes. My 2024 Democratic National Convention coverage, recognized with an NABJ Undergraduate Short Form Award, further sharpened my ability to report on high-stakes political moments with clarity, speed, and cultural nuance. I covered voter registration strategies in communities of color, raising structural questions about how community organization ensures representation. I've produced and reported at Broccoli City Festival, Blavity Festival, CultureCon, and AfroTech- events that don't just reflect culture, but set it. I know how to find the story within a moment, deliver it with authority, and reach an audience that would scroll past anything that doesn't immediately earn their attention.

At CNN, I have worked inside one of the world's largest newsrooms, adapting breaking news in real time, collaborating across editorial teams, and understanding how decisions get made at an institutional scale. This experience has sharpened my ability to move quickly without sacrificing accuracy. I'm equally comfortable on teleprompter and off-script, I thrive in same-day production environment that your team requires. Complex News appeals to me because of the unique voice and authority it has amongst audiences- encouraging larger conversation across politics.

I am a Howard University alumna, NABJ award recipient, and Student Emmy winner with credits across Blavity, CultureCon, and CNN. I am prepared to bring the same community-centered rigor I've applied locally and nationally to Future Perfect's global scope- and to grow into the kind of journalist who can hold both in the same story.

Yours sincerely,

Trinity Kinslow
